

3.1 Assignment: Adapting to Challenges

My Response

1. A challenge I'm facing in my leadership role

One challenge I'm dealing with right now is trying to balance new responsibilities while still supporting the people around me. It feels like everything is moving fast, and I'm expected to adjust just as quickly. What helps me is stepping back, calming my mind, and asking for guidance before I make decisions. When I do that, things become clearer, and I find better ways to adapt instead of reacting out of stress. It reminds me that patience, wisdom, and consistency matter more than rushing.

2. A moment when I need to take a risk or make a tough decision

There are times when I have to make decisions that aren't easy, especially when the outcome affects others. Esther's story shows how courage and preparation can go hand in hand. She didn't act recklessly—she acted with purpose. That approach encourages me to handle my own decisions the same way: take the time to think, understand the situation from different angles, and then move forward with confidence. Sometimes the hardest part is simply trusting that doing the right thing will lead to the right result.
